Currently all citizens of EU member states have the right to live and work in other member states. British people have the right to live in other European countries, and citizens of other European countries have the right to live here

There is nothing wrong with other European citizens having the right to come to live in Britain, and we should welcome it	22	16	30	46	3	14	24	33	25	20	33	28	20	15	27	15	29	21	24	17	27
Other European citizens having the right to come and live in Britain is damaging, but the British government needs to obey the law and has no choice but to allow them in	20	25	19	21	11	20	20	21	19	20	18	20	19	21	20	18	18	17	19	25	17
Other European citizens having the right to come and live in Britain is damaging and the British government should act to restrict their right to live or work here, even if it means breaking EU laws or British citizens losing the right to live elsewhere in Europe	42	47	38	24	78	53	40	33	43	41	26	34	45	52	38	47	36	46	44	41	34

Under European Union law citizens from other European Union countries are allowed to claim benefits if they live in Britain and British citizens are allowed to claim benefits if they go to live in another European Union country. It is illegal to discriminate against other EU citizens based on nationality, but countries can have benefit rules based on residence or past contributions

Would you support or oppose changing the rules on benefits so they are only available to people who have been resident in Britain for a fixed period of time, such as a year?

Earlier this week the former Home Secretary Jack Straw said that the last Labour government made a "spectacular mistake" by relaxing restrictions on immigrants from Poland and other eastern European countries in 2004, when other countries in Europe waited until 2011 to do so

Thinking about Pope Francis, from what you have seen so far do you think he is doing a good or bad job in the role?

[Previously asked as 'Thinking about the new Pope, Pope Francis, from what you have seen so far do you think he will do a good or bad job in the role?']
