Currently most food and groceries sold in shops and supermarkets is not subject to VAT.

However, food served in restaurants and most takeaway fast food is subject to VAT.

In the past some hot food like pasties and sausage rolls were not subject to VAT. In the budget George Osborne changed the rules to add VAT to hot food like pasties and sausage rolls.

Do you think hot food like pasties and sausage rolls should or should not be subject to VAT?

Last week the Conservative party's co-treasurer, Peter Cruddas, was filmed apparently offering access to the Prime Minister and influence over policy discussions in exchange for a donation to the party of £250,000. Mr Cruddas has since resigned and said that his conversation was just "bluster" and there was not really any question of donors being able to influence policy or gain undue access to politicians.

Which of the following best reflects your view?

Mr Cruddas was exaggerating the amount of access or influence that donors would have to try and persuade people to give the party money	26	52	13	35	46	13	22	29	23	21	25	26	28	28	23	24	30	26	20	27
Mr Cruddas was telling the truth, and donors to the party really do have preferential access and influence	53	33	70	51	39	65	60	56	50	40	47	57	59	53	53	44	50	55	60	53
