Nigella Lawson and Charles Saatchi divorced earlier this year.

Two of the couples former personal assistants are currently being tried for fraudulently using Charles Saatchi's credit cards, in a case that has revealed some details of Saatchi and Lawson's private lives.

From what you have seen or heard about the case, who do you have more sympathy for?

As part of the court case against Charles Saatchi's former assistants it has been revealed that Nigella Lawson took Cocaine in the past. Nigella Lawson said in court she had only take cocaine on a few occasions, mostly with her former husband John Diamond when he was terminally ill. Do you think Nigella Lawson is or is not telling the truth?

The government has committed to introducing a year of shared leave for new parents by April 2015.

Currently fathers are entitled to two weeks parental leave, and after that can share some of the parental leave with their partner. The father is able to take up to six months of parental leave once the mother has returned to work, but only after the baby is 20 weeks and only as a single block.

Under the new proposal parents would be able to split parental leave between them however they wished

Imagine you and your partner were to have a child under the new proposals. Do you think you would or would not share the parental leave after the first fortnight?

[Only asked to respondents under the age of 45; n=773*]

Yes, we would probably share the leave between us	29	20	37	41	19	18	35	30	30	27	36	29	19	0	32	24	39	26	29	23	33

In the previous question you said you and your partner would share parental leave if you were to have children under the new parental leave rules. How do you think you would split the time?

*[Only asked to respondents under the age of 45, and who would share parental leave; n=222*]*

We would both take equal parts of the available parental leave
 The mother would take the majority of the parental leave
 The father would take the majority of the parental leave
