At present, classroom teachers in state schools are entitled to annual pay increments early in their career, provided that they meet certain standards. It has been suggested that this system of semi-automatic increments should be abolished, and head teachers should have far more freedom to link each teacher's pay to their performance. Which of these views comes closer to yours?

The present system should be kept: it is fair and prevents damaging competition between teachers at the same school	34	22	48	25	21	45	40	34	33	37	34	36	29	36	31	34	34	32	32	39	36	41	38
