Thinking about the level of taxes in the UK and whether this encourages tax avoidance, which of the following best reflects your view?

- High tax rates in the UK on business and the rich encourage tax avoidance and should be reduced
- High tax rates in the UK on business and the rich encourage tax avoidance, but the government should crack down on avoidance rather than cut taxes
- Tax rates in the UK on business and the rich are not too high and don't encourage tax avoidance

Do you currently boycott the products or services of any companies in response to them not paying their fair share of tax?

- Yes - there are companies I actively boycott because they don't pay enough tax
- No - while I care whether companies pay tax I don't really know enough about the subject or which companies don't pay tax to boycott them
- No - when buying things price, quality and other considerations are more important to me than whether a company pays tax
- Not sure

In recent years some retired politicians, senior civil servants or senior military officers have gone on to work for private sector companies in lobbying roles - that is, using their knowledge and contacts in government to help promote the interests of clients to government ministers and civil servants

Thinking about former civil servants and military officers taking up jobs for lobbying companies, which of the following best reflects your view?

There is nothing wrong with former military officers or civil servants who have left their jobs using their knowledge of and contacts in government to earn a living

It is wrong that former military officers or civil servants should be able to use their contacts in and knowledge of government to make money and it risks conflicts of interest or corruption

Currently former civil servants, military officers and politicians have to consult with an independent body - ACOBA - before they take jobs in the private sector after leaving or retiring from public service. This body can advise they do not take a job because of potential conflicts or interest, or suggest restrictions, such as barring them from lobbying government and officials that worked for them. Currently ACOBA is only advisory, and doesn't have any legal powers to enforce its recommendations.

Would you support or oppose giving ACOBA powers to enforce tougher punishments against former civil servants and officers who ignore their recommendations, such as removing their honours?

Shale gas is natural gas trapped under sedimentary rock, which is extracted using a method known as hydraulic fracturing, or "fracking". There are large reserves of shale gas in Lancashire.

Some people think that using shale gas could be a solution to Britain's energy needs. Other people think that fracking is a dangerous technique that risks contaminating ground water and causing minor earthquakes.

From what you have seen or heard about the issue, do you think the government should or should not support the use of fracking in the UK?

Bovine tuberculosis (TB) is an infectious disease of cattle. It can be spread from cow to cow, but is also thought to be spread by infected badgers. The government are supporting a cull of badgers in order to reduce badger numbers and reduce the risk of them spreading TB to cattle.

Do you think the proposed cull of badgers should or should not go ahead?
