This week over a hundred Conservative MPs voted for an amendment to the Queens Speech saying they regretted it did not include legislation on an EU referendum. David Cameron has published a draft law setting up a referendum, but says it is impossible for the government to introduce the law because the Liberal Democrats in the coalition do not agree with it.

In 1999 the Macpherson report found that the Metropolitan police were institutionally racist, that is, they failed to give an appropriate service to some groups in society because of their colour, culture or ethnicity. Do you think the police today is or is not institutionally racist?

Which of the following best reflects your view?

The police should only prosecute and target people in relation to specific crimes when they have proper evidence against them. Harassing people for no specific offence is an abuse of police power.

The police normally know who the local trouble makers are and should do what they can to crack down on them and keep them off the streets even if they don't have the evidence to charge them for specific crimes.

Last November the first Police and Crime Commissioners were elected, replacing police authorities made up of local councillors and independent appointees.

Do you think Police and Crime Commissioners should be retained, or should the position be abolished and oversight of the police returned to police authorities?

[Only asked to respondents outside of London and Scotland n=1459]

Police and Crime Commissioners should be kept
Police and Crime Commissioners should be abolished, and we should return to having police authorities

If you were offered the chance to have a genetic screening that could identify whether you had an increased risk of developing cancer or other diseases or disorders later in life, would you want to. Below are some diseases and conditions, in each case please say whether you would or would not want to know if you had an increased genetic risk of developing the disease.
