Parliament currently has two chambers, the House of Commons and the House of Lords.

Currently the House of Lords is mostly made up of people appointed by the political parties or by the House of Lords Appointments Commission, which nominates independent Lords. The House of Lords also has seats for senior Church of England bishops and 92 remaining hereditary peers.

The Government have proposed replacing the House of Lords with a mainly elected House of Lords. 360 members of the House of Lords would be elected by proportional representation for fifteen years, with a third of the House elected every five years. Ninety independent Lords would continue to be appointed, and 12 bishops would keep their seats. The remaining hereditary peers would be abolished.

Do you support or oppose these proposals for a mainly elected House of Lords?

Which of these views comes closest to yours?

Reform of the House of Lords is vital: it should be a priority to change the system so that its members are elected by the public

Reform of the House of Lords is a good idea, but it is NOT a priority at the moment, given Britain's other problems

The House of Lords works reasonably well and should be left alone

This week the House of Commons voted in favour of an elected House of Lords, but 91 Conservative MPs voted against it and the government failed to pass a timetable motion for the bill. Without this motion there is no limit to the amount of time it could take to pass the law and in practice it is unlikely to ever become law.

Do you think...

The government should continue to try and pass a law making the House of Lords elected, and should keep trying to get a timetable for the bill agreed	32	29	37	53	24	29	42	35	29	37	38	30	28	33	31	34	31	30	32	40

Last week George Osborne suggested that Ed Balls had "questions to answer" over the Libor fixing scandal at Barclays Bank and that Labour ministers in the last government were "clearly involved". Since then the Deputy Governor of the Bank of England has said that the Bank of England was NOT told by ministers to encourage Barclays to lie about its interest rates.

Do you think George Osborne should or should not apologise to Mr Balls?

At the moment elderly people who need to go into care are means-tested. People with under £14,250 of assets (including their home) have their care paid for, people with more than this have to contribute to the costs of their care, or if they have £23,250 have to pay the entire costs of their care. This will often involve selling their home to pay for residential care.

The government have suggested introducing a cap on the amount that any person should have to contribute towards the cost of their care. Would you support or oppose introducing a cap?
