Lord Rennard has been suspended from the Liberal Democrat party after allegations he behaved improperly towards a number of women when he was chief executive of the Liberal Democrats some years ago.

An investigation into Lord Rennard's behaviour found the accusations were "broadly credible", but that they could not be proved beyond doubt so Lord Rennard would not be disciplined. Alistair Webster QC, who led the inquiry, recommended that Lord Rennard apologise.

Lord Rennard says he is innocent of the accusations and cannot apologise for something he did not do. As a result he has been suspended from the party
Do you think Lord Rennard should or should not apologise?

Should - he has behaved wrongly and should say sorry

Should not - if he does not feel he has done anything wrong it would be wrong to say sorry

Should be expelled - by not apologising he is damaging the party

Should not be expelled - there is no proof that he has done anything wrong
