Anjem Choudary is a radical Muslim and the former spokesman of al-Muhajiroun and Islam4UK, both of which have now been banned. Last week the BBC faced criticism for interviewing Choudary on Newsnight following the Woolwich murder. During the interview Mr Choudary refused to condemn the attack.

Do you think the BBC was right or wrong to interview Anjem Choudary following the Woolwich murder?

Right - it is right that all views, even those of extremists, are represented and it was an opportunity for the interviewers to challenge Choudary's views and hold him to account	32	23	40	53	20	22	38	43	36	29	39	37	34	24	36	28	38	31	35	28	38

Which of the following best reflects your view?

Banning extremist preachers from radio, television and mainstream websites would help fight terrorism, as people who might be influenced by them would be less likely to be exposed to their message	36	44	36	28	46	47	38	26	38	34	26	34	35	44	34	39	38	36	36	37	33
Banning extremist preachers from radio, television and mainstream websites might make us feel better, but would not really help fight terrorism - in the internet age it impossible to stop those who would seek out extremist messages from finding them	56	50	54	65	50	48	55	68	54	57	59	56	59	50	58	53	53	57	55	56	59
