Ken Livingstone has pledged to cut transport fares by 7% this autumn if he is elected Mayor of London, saying he will use surplus money in Transport for London's accounts to pay for the cut. Boris Johnson says this money is needed for upgrades to the transport system. Boris Johnson has proposed introducing driverless trains on some London Underground lines. As on the Docklands Light Railway, there trains would still have a Passenger Service Agent (or "train captain") manning each train.

Would you support or oppose introducing driverless trains on some London Underground lines?
