Thinking about the outcome of the negotiations, which of the following do you think is most likely?

The government will end up making a deal for a "softer" Brexit than they have said they want, with Britain agreeing to follow many EU rules	29	31	29	32	30	29	28	30	26	31	32	25	31	27	28	31	29	29	22

The government have said that once a Brexit deal has been negotiated that Parliament will have a "meaningful" vote on whether or not to accept the deal.

Some people have suggested that some Brexit deals would not represent a genuine Brexit, and would not honour the result of the referendum. Think about the following the following scenarios and in each case, regardless of whether you think the outcome would be good for Britain, please say whether you think it would be a "genuine Brexit"

Britain leaves the European Union, but continues to follow some EU rules to avoid having to introduce a hard border with Ireland

This would be a genuine Brexit, and would honour the outcome of the referendum
 This would not be a genuine Brexit, and wouldn't be honouring the outcome of the referendum
