Before the Scottish referendum all three main parties promised to give more powers to the Scottish Parliament if Scotland voted NO, and to put the new powers in place before May. Following the NO vote there has also been discussion of how increased devolution to Scotland should be reflected in England, including whether only English MPs should be able to vote on English laws. On this issue the main political parties do NOT agree.

If the main political parties cannot agree on how increased Scottish devolution should be reflected in England, and whether Scottish MPs should be allowed to vote on English laws, do you think...

Increased Scottish devolution should go ahead as promised, with England being sorted out later on	27	16	41	43	11	13	38	36	30	23	28	28	30	22	31	22	26	22	28	20	61
Increased Scottish devolution should have to wait until the main parties can decide what happens in England	23	33	18	24	36	32	19	20	24	22	20	17	24	30	24	22	24	29	21	23	4
Increased Scottish devolution should go ahead as promised, and the government should try to set new rules on which MPs can vote on English laws without the agreement of the opposition	27	40	19	20	36	41	19	25	30	24	18	25	25	35	29	25	20	28	29	28	26
