Thinking about WHY Theresa May chose to call an early election, which of the following best reflects your view?

Theresa May didn't really have a strong enough mandate or a big enough majority to get what she wanted done - the election is mostly about getting a big enough majority to get the job done

Theresa May could have got what she wanted done with her existing majority and mandate - the election is mostly about taking advantage of her opponents' weakness and crushing Labour

The Fixed Term Parliament Act was passed in 2011 and was supposed to take away the Prime Minister's power to ask the Queen to call an election on a date of their choice. Instead there would be a general election every five years unless MPs were unable to form a government or two thirds of MPs voted for an early election. This week Theresa May called an early election after more than two-thirds of MPs voted in favour of one. Do you think...

The Fixed Term Parliament should be abolished, and the Prime Minister again allowed to ask the Queen to call an election

The Fixed Term Parliament should be kept as it is, with the Prime Minister able to call an election if 2/3rds of MPs agree

The Fixed Term Parliament should be made tougher, so the Prime Minister cannot get around it by getting MPs to vote in favour of an election
