The Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) is an international trade deal currently being negotiated between the European Union and the United States. Some people say this deal will provide the UK with economic growth by making it easier for us to trade with the US. Other people say that the deal will leave the NHS exposed to US-style privatisation, and that the deal will allow the UK government to be sued by big global corporations if the government passes laws that dent corporations' profits.

Do you think the Transatlantic Trade and Investment Partnership (TTIP) is good or bad for the UK, or will it make no difference?

Like many trade deals, many of the TTIP negotiations are taking place behind closed doors. Some people are asking the negotiators to be more transparent about the terms of the trade deal, while others say that the deal is too sensitive to be talked about openly.

To what extent, if at all, do you trust the British Government to negotiate a trade deal that is in the best interests of the UK?
