Imagine a situation where someone in a high profile organisation has been accused of misbehaviour that has damaged the organisation's public image, but where there is not enough evidence to prove the person actually did what they are accused of

Do you think that...

They should lose their role as it is damaging the wider organisation
 They should keep their role as it has not been proved that they've done anything wrong

The Liberal Democrats conducted an investigation into the allegations against Lord Rennard. It found that the accusations against Lord Rennard were "broadly credible" but could not be proved beyond doubt so Lord Rennard would not be disciplined. Alistair Webster QC, who led the inquiry, recommended that Lord Rennard apologise. Lord Rennard says he is innocent of the accusations and cannot apologise for something he did not do
Do you think that...

Lord Rennard should leave the Liberal Democrats as he is damaging the wider organisation
