*The Bribery Act is a new law due to come into force later this year which will ban companies from paying bribes, in this country and abroad. It has been criticised by some companies who say it is too strict and could end up banning corporate hospitality and that it may lead to British companies losing on out contracts in developing countries where bribery is widespread. Other people think the law is essential if Britain is to play its part in fighting corruption abroad.

Do you think British companies should or should not be banned from paying bribes abroad?
