Tony Blair has said he will stand down as Prime Minister and Leader of the Labour Party, and Gordon Brown is widely expected to take over in that job.

We'd like to know which potential deputy leader you think would be best alongside Gordon Brown.

For each pairing, please state if you think it would make you much more likely, a little more likely, a little less likely or much less likely to vote Labour at the next general election.

Please try and answer the question even if you don't know much at all about the candidate.

Do you agree or disagree with the following statements about the future of the Labour Party?

I think a men-only leadership team would show that Labour is old-fashioned.

Tend to disagree	28	32	24	34	23
Disagree strongly	14	21	8	13	16

It's important to me that the next Deputy Prime Minister is someone I already know, not someone I've never heard of.
