The Government is currently considering whether to allow private companies to take over parts of the NHS Blood and Transplant Service, such as the testing, processing and transport of blood.

Some say that this will make the NHS Blood and Transplant Service more cost effective and will save money for the rest of the NHS. Others say that as those who donate their blood do not get paid it would be wrong for a private company to make money from this service.

Do you support or oppose the use of private companies to run parts of the NHS Blood and Transplant Service?
